

Night Blooming Jasmine

A summer night releases the romantic, sultry perfume of night blooming jasmine, a favorite fragrance shrub for home landscapes in South Florida.

The cascading clusters of tiny tubular flowers are cream colored - not particularly showy but they pack a wallop of scent when they open at dusk.

The fragrance is present but much lighter during the daytime hours.

Though not a true jasmine, this plant's strong fragrance is legend among fragrant plant lovers.

This plant does best in a sunny spot, with an informal look that works well in tropical or cottage-garden styles of landscaping - or it can soften the look of a more manicured yard.

It flowers on and off all year - more in warmer months - with small white berries appearing after the bloom cycle.
